not even been there since her arrival in town.

"Mr. Mcckay's apartments have been locked up for some time," said the janitor of the Belgravia to an 'Evening World' reporter this morning, 'and neither he nor any of his family has been seen here for several weeks.

"There is not even a servant in charge of the rooms. Dozens of people have called here since the news of the arrival of the Frincess and her children in town became public, but we have had to tell them all the same story.

"I have not the slightest idea where the Princess is staying, as not one of the family have sent any word to me, and the story that she drove here yesterday from the steamer is without any foundation."

At the Waldorf Hotel it was said that neither Mr. Mackay nor his son was staying there. There was a rumor current, however, that a friend of the family had stated that they were living in an uptown apartment-thouse, near Central Park, but the name of the house was not given. No information could be obtained as to the present abode of the family.

The Princess Colonna and her three children—Andrew, the eldest, who is eight years old; Blanco, six, and Marco, four—arrived here early yesterday morning on the steamship New York. John W. Mackay, jr., the brother of the Princess, accompanied them from England.

They travelled under assumed names, the passenger list showing that Mr. Mackay had registered as "J. M. Morton," and the remainder of the party appeared as "Mrs. Morton and three children." For this reason their departure had escaped observation when the steamer left Southampton on Feb. 3.

Prince Colonna had obtained an order from the French courts allowing him to see his children while they were in Paris and he called there frequently. His wife, however, as she now says, feared that an attempt would be made by the Prince and his friends to abduct one of them. In fact, she had good grounds for such a suspicion, as she was informed that the conspiracy was about to be carried out, so she took warning and fled from the country with her children.

London, however, is not so very far from Paris, and it was feared that an attempt would be made there by the Prince's fariends to get possession of the children, so she resolved to come to this country to be still further removed from her husband.

It is understood that the legal proceedings in the French courts will be discontinued and that the action brought by the Prince's for a separation will be commenced here.
